

IN THE
FACE OF
CORPORATE IMPUNITY

PROGRESS IN EUROPE

IT IS URGENT TO LEGISLATE ON MULTINATIONALS' DUTY OF CARE!

Providing a regulatory framework for multinationals by means of binding rules is essential. Even if companies contribute to the economy, their activities may also result in fundamental human rights violations and environmental damages that voluntary initiatives alone cannot prevent effectively.

Since 2011, the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights require companies to respect human rights through the implementation of "due diligence". These monitoring systems aim to identify and prevent risks, while establishing redress mechanisms and providing access to justice for victims. The UN is also preparing a binding treaty on transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights, however this will take a long time to be established. The OECD and the European Commission have taken measures on, but without creating a binding framework. The Commission has also encouraged EU Member States to implement the principles of the United Nations in their own internal law.

Since the enforcement of these declarations relies on the political will of each State, it is high time for them to take action.

France is preparing a bill relating to the duty of care incumbent upon parent and subcontracting companies, which is struggling to be definitively adopted. Yet this bill would finally make it possible to tackle the human rights violations and corruption taking place in French companies' supply and production chains.

France is not the only European country working towards this objective. Here is the proof..¹

AT THE EUROPEAN LEVEL

SEVERAL MEMBER STATES ASK THE EUROPEAN UNION TO GO FURTHER.

In May 2016, the French National Assembly and seven other European parliaments launched a “Green Card” initiative in order to ask the European Commission to legislate on a duty of care for European companies. Such a duty of care should prevent and repair abuses towards peoples and communities, whose rights and environment are impacted by European companies’ activities.

The parliaments involved are the ones of Estonia, Lithuania, Slovakia and Portugal, the UK House of Lords, the House of Representatives in the Netherlands, the Senate of the Republic in Italy, and the National Assembly in France (recently joined by Greece). On the 18th of May 2016, during an inter-parliamentarian conference with representatives of 22 EU member states, Members of the Parliament from Germany, Greece, Romania, Czech Republic and Denmark signed a common statement supporting this action at the EU level.

THE COUNCIL OF EUROPE IS REQUESTING ITS 47 MEMBER STATES TO GO EVEN FURTHER.

In March 2016, the Council of Europe’s decision-making body, the Committee of Ministers, adopted a recommendation encouraging Member States to legislate on the effective implementation of companies’ due diligence requirement as regards any of their business activities that have an impact on human rights.

This recommendation stipulates that this due diligence requirement must reflect the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.
